Urban watercolor sketching is a practice that involves creating quick, expressive watercolor artworks inspired by city environments. It often emphasizes capturing the essence of a scene—its atmosphere, movement, and character—rather than meticulous detail. Artists typically work en plein air (outdoors), directly observing their surroundings and translating the urban landscape onto paper in a spontaneous manner.

This art form blends traditional watercolor techniques with sketching fundamentals, allowing for a versatile approach to depicting city life. It is favored for its portability, immediacy, and ability to evoke mood and vibrancy through color and loose brushwork.
